I thought of peace when I saw the rose. I thought of life in the way it grows. The tiny bush fed by rain and sun, sprouts out leaves one by one. And the thorns are there to let us know, that life's not always a rosy flow. In spite of the thorns the buds peep through, and the rose opens to the morning dew. I thought of success when I saw the rose, and love and happiness and all life knows. I thought of death as it faded away, and returned once more to the loam and clay. I thought of God's promise for life anew, and of the rose and how it grew. Now I know when the winter's done, my rose will return with the spring time sun.
